Location

South Lochboisdale is a small crofting township situated just off the B888, a short distance south of Daliburgh. Local amenities in Daliburgh include a hotel, shop, primary school, community hall and filling station. Further facilities are available in Lochboisdale, approximately 5 miles away, which also serves as the main ferry port for South Uist with regular sailings to Oban, Barra and Mallaig.

Benbecula lies to the north and provides secondary schooling, additional amenities and a small airport with regular mainland connections.

The wider Uists are renowned for their natural beauty, abundant wildlife and unspoilt sandy beaches along the west coast, all within easy reach.
